Regulated Public Utilities

Markets in Transition

Challenges & Opportunities

The traditional regulated utility markets of yester-year no longer exist. With rising energy costs, declining natural resources, and increasing competition, public utilities companies must find innovative ways to deliver their services in the 21st century. The California Public Utilities Commission plays a major role in overseeing energy, telephone and water utilities, as well as moving companies and railroads. CPUC President, Michael Peevey, will discuss several policy initiatives currently underway at the Commission and share his perspective of the potential impact on today's markets.
